

CARD OF THANKS.

While at such times it is hard to say and feel from the innumerable kindnesses of our heart "I will be home"; while there is a vacant "empty" in the home, an empty seat at school, and the loss of a merry ringing voice in the neighborhood, let us leave it with "Him who knoweth best" and comfort ourselves with the thought that heaven would not be heaven without the love and merry voices of children.

Mr. and Mrs. Timothy L. Heath, while knowing that wishes at such times are idle to express their thoughts and feelings, yet they wish to thank each and all for their words of sympathy, their tokens of love, and acts of kindness manifest during the hour of their greatest affliction.

NORWAY AND VICINITY.

Appeared in Old Time Dresses.

The Quiet Club held their regular meeting on Tuesday evening with Abby Curtis, and at the hour of gathering many to the surprise of their hostess appeared in antiquarian garb. A number of the ladies of the club possess fine dresses which were most stylish years ago. Some of them were bridal of their selves, their mothers or their grandmothers and the difference in the gown of fifty years ago was scarcely less than those of but a dozen years back. There were brooches and bags of many years ago, and the bonnets!

Members of the club will brook no denial of the statement that they had the best time of any similar organization.

An exceptionally pleasant and companionable number of ladies, who cast aside all care and some cynic as all dignity, and have a lark. Hence the name. Tuesday's gathering is a bright remembrance with them all, as they were excellently entertained by Miss Curtis.

To the right of this band is a lighter, speckled area. A thin, straight vertical line is visible on the left side of the dark band, extending from the top to the bottom of the frame. The overall appearance is grainy and noisy, typical of a low-quality scan of a physical document.

Storming of Jared Taylor's Heart

By IMOGEN CLARK

Copyright, 1905, by Imogen Clark

CHAPTER I.

"H" The stillness of the parlor was broken by that slight sound. Miss Cordelia Slater started in some trepidation and glanced at her twin sister as she leaned forward in her chair, her face pressed close against the discreetly bowed blinds. In doing this Miss Cordelia had to relinquish a similar position in the window which she considered her own. She felt distinctly ill at ease. A sound which may be interpreted into untold significance or which may have been uttered with the most innocent of intentions leaves a listener at a disadvantage. She did not wish to precipitate matters by what might be termed curiosity, though she felt the questions leap to her lips, and still less did she wish to appear like a fool. She waited almost apprehensively, her throat growing dry, until she was forced to make her choice between a cough and strangulation, giving voice to the former in a nervous manner, at which Miss Cordelia sat erect and glanced in her turn at her sister.

The two women were singularly alike. Fifty years spent side by side had done much to increase a resemblance which nature had marked strongly at the outset. The progress of time, however, had been a placid one with them, leaving few of its severer traces behind. They still retained many of the customs of their youth, as is apt to be the case with people where there is no occasion to make room for a younger generation. Broadmeadows, too, was charmingly conservative. Fashion crept slowly up that way, and the appearance of the sisters with their bygone airs and graces did not seem out of place there. Familiarity had bred a certain amount of indifference, so far as the small, slight figures were concerned, and amid a more than undue share of spinsters they were not pre-eminently noticeable.

That afternoon Miss Cordelia was dressed in a pineapple muslin sprinkled with faint marks that had once been roses. Her sleeves fell a trifle below her elbows, and she had a little way of patting her arms, which were round and pretty, almost as if she admired them. Cordelia, whose sleeves had always been long, characterized the action as unseemly, and once Cordelia had been known to say in defense that it was no more reprehensible to be fond of one's dimples than of one's curls, a piece of logic which her sister could not refute, though secretly surprised that Cordelia, who usually lacked spirit, should be the author of such a retort.

Miss Cordelia straightened the green bow at her throat, put her hand to the back of her head, where her curls were gathered high and held in place by an elaborately carved comb, patted them softly and then tossed up the little ringlets on her forehead, which had been disarranged by their pressure against the blind.

"Did you see anything unusual just now?" she demanded.

"Why?" Miss Cordelia faltered, looking at the stronger face intently before answering the question and feeling her way for the right word as daintily as a cat picks her footsteps in wet weather. "It occurred to me that Jared—Captain Taylor, I should say—was beginning to take notice."

"Beginning to take notice! Cordelia Slater! That man's been taking notice for months. I wouldn't wonder if he'd taken notice right along—that is, after the first week or so."

"You needn't be astonished. The craze a man wears on his hat isn't like a woman's veil. It isn't ever supposed to cover his eyes. He sees and knows pretty well what's going on. And I guess Jared Taylor isn't any more faithful than the rest of them, or different either. There's no denying that he was a good husband, and most likely he did care when she was taken; but, for all that, it's ridiculous to say he's bowed down with grief now, when anybody with an atom of common sense can see that the bouquets grow smaller and smaller."

"Cordelia!"

"Don't shriek my name out for the whole town to hear! It's the truth, I tell you. Because Jared Taylor stops at the hedge and looks at our house you think he's beginning to take notice. Bah! As if that kind of noticing meant anything! I declare, you are as simple as the rest. You want something you can lay your finger on. If he should put on a red tie now, you and all Broadmeadows would say he was going into colors, but I flatter myself I can tell when his mind is putting off mourning without waiting for him to graduate into shades."

She sniffed her contempt and fanned herself vigorously for a few moments, the uneven sweep of the palm leaf brushing against her flat chest with a little rattling sound like one of derision.

He terminated to wait and see. The next time he went by the bunch was smaller by a trifle, last Sunday there was a considerable falling off, and today—"Perhaps he couldn't find many flowers."

"Couldn't find many! What's to prevent him in mid-July? Look at our garden, and it isn't half as large as his! What do you see there? Geraniums, sweet alyssum, bouncing bets, heliotropes, striped grass. It would tire one to go through the catalogue. All those and, more you can find in Jared Taylor's garden at this very minute. You could have them for the picking, and so could he. Perhaps you didn't notice what he had. Well, I can tell you. He'd a bunch of nasturtiums, such a bunch as he could pick without stirring from his own piazza—a handful, with limp, straggling ends

She sniffed her contempt.

just put together better skelter—and he was taking them out there to the cemetery, and you know and I know that Eliza Taylor always hated the very sight of a nasturtium."

She sank back in her chair and twirled the little jet bands on her wrists, eying her companion triumphantly.

"The fact is," she went on, "his mind is on other things. He's been a widower for eight months now, and he's looking round. How do I know? How do I know that the grass is green and the sky blue? Because I can see. I don't say he knows it himself yet, though he may. Men are so deep there's no fathoming them! But there's his heart just waiting to be turned in any direction."

Miss Cordelia remained like one petrified.

"In any direction, I said, and there are plenty here to do it. There isn't an unmarried woman in Broadmeadows who hasn't looked with envy at that big house of his and longed to own it. You needn't toss your head. It's one of the finest houses in town, and I used to think twas thrown away upon Eliza Taylor. She'd have been satisfied with something smaller and plainer. She thought all the treasures the captain brought from overseas were less trash. She told me so herself."

There was a horrified protest, accompanied by the faintest sigh.

"I think so often of those shells and things," the thin voice pursued relentlessly. "I know his old servant never dusts them from week's end to week's end. I seem to feel that now is the time when Jared Taylor needs a strong arm to lean upon. Left to himself, there's no telling what he may do. I caught him looking at the girls in the choir this morning as if he realized for the first time that they were girls, and that's a bad sign for a widower. There'd be no hope for an older woman if his heart got tangled up in a girl's ribbons. No matter how hard she should tug, the ribbons would have the best of it. And I say 'twould be ridiculous and shameful for a girl of a girl to step into Eliza Taylor's shoes."

"Ridiculous and shameful!" echoed Miss Cordelia, with unwonted energy. "But how can you—or—anybody prevent it?"

Miss Cordelia flashed a contemptuous glance at the speaker.

"He knows he has good friends in us," she said irrelevantly. "I've let him see that."

A sudden light flashed upon Miss Cordelia's dull brain. She trembled at the discovery.

"Those cup custards you made last Wednesday were for him!" she gasped. "I thought they were for Lucia Hale. You told me so."

"I told you the truth, but Lucia Hale couldn't eat a half dozen, and I didn't propose to slave myself to death providing delicacies for her children. One custard was quite enough for her."

"But how—but how did you get them to him?"

"That wasn't difficult," Miss Cordelia returned, with a low chuckle. "I went past his house on my way from the Hales', and he was on the sidewalk. He always sits there mornings.

We exchanged a few remarks about the weather, and then I said I'd some custards in my basket that were made after poor dear Eliza's recipe. I was taking them to a neighbor, but I meant to leave them with him instead. He looked as delighted as a child, and what's more, he didn't say no. He hasn't sent back the cups yet. Well, he's welcome to them, especially as two are cracked."

"You were your mauve muslin on Wednesday," Miss Cordelia said dreamily. "I remember wondering why you put it on, for the road to Lucia's is so dusty. You always look very nice in mauve, Corny, dear." She paused for a moment to gather courage, then asked tremulously, "Have you made anything else for him?"

A satisfied smile curved the corners of Miss Cordelia's prim mouth. She plaited a fold of her skirt between her fingers before speaking.

"What did I do yesterday, Cordelia?"

"Yesterday? There was a meeting for the heathen in the morning, and it was slimly attended. It always is, and that's not because we're not interested in the heathens, poor things, and willing to make clothes to cover their nakedness. But Saturday is such a busy day. The president ought!" She stopped in her discursiveness, then hastily resumed: "You were there, of course, and you didn't stir out of the house all the afternoon. You were making crullers."

"Exactly."

"But, Cordelia, I don't see—you didn't use Eliza Taylor's recipe?"

"Eliza Taylor's recipe! Eliza Taylor make crullers! I suppose she did—those dreadful, common looking brown crullers that are an insult to any one's digestion. You know I don't make that kind. You know there isn't another woman in Broadmeadows who can make crullers like mine—little, dainty, twisted ones, the size of a half dollar, that only a gentleman's hands could concoct."

She glanced at her taper fingers with pride, moving them gently as if she were manipulating some tender morsels of dough between their delicate tips.

"As for my recipe," she continued, "I found it with Aunt Pamela's papers, and it reads like a poem—rosewater, spice, sugar—Ah, nobody shall know it while I live!"

She paused and glanced from the window. Then, with a quick exclamation, she hurried from the room.

CHAPTER II.

Miss Cordelia stared after the retreating figure with something like dismay on her part. For a few moments she seemed incapable of moving, of thinking even, but at the sound of steps on the gravel without she leaned again toward the blind, only to sink back with a low cry as she saw Cordelia piloting the not unwilling captain up the garden path. She was conscious of the scraping of chairs on the porch, followed by the appearance of her sister momentarily at the parlor door with an authoritative gesture, in obedience to which she glided out to meet the guest. Her bosom beat tremulously.

A day ago—nay, that very morning—she would have met Captain Taylor with an almost unflinching mien, but the disclosures of the previous hour had altered everything. She put forward a limp hand and trembled at the hearty pressure it received. A thousand thoughts leaped into her mind. She was glad she had selected blue ribbons that afternoon. Blue was always becoming, and it was his favorite color—a reminiscence of her girlhood stirred suddenly into life. She glanced down absently, and her lowered eyes rested upon the soft curve of her forearm. She wondered if—

For sister's step sounded along the hall, and Miss Cordelia sank shamefacedly into the chair which the captain placed for her, hugging her elbows desperately to hide both her flesh and her confusion.

Miss Cordelia approached, carrying a tray in her hands. She deposited the captain's aid with a coquettish toss of her curls, while Cordelia gazed agape at the festive preparations. The high glass pitcher and the slender tumblers grouped at its side were objects of veneration in the Slater household. The astonished woman could not remember the time when she had not admired their beauty. As a child her chubby fingers had followed the gold tracery along the edge on some rare holiday, while the caution, "Take care!" sounded perpetually in her ears. She wanted to echo it now. What was Cordelia thinking of? And as if the shrub were not sufficient, it was flanked by the old dish of lily root and gold, filled with little glistening cakes.

The clever strategist, unheeding the tumult she had awakened in one breast at least, placed, her burden upon a table and poured out a glass of the rosy liquid, motioning to her sister to serve herself. The captain took the proffered delicacy shyly and waited until his hostess had possessed herself of a similar glass. Then he raised his to his lips, bowing to the two gentlemen. He took a deep draught and put down his empty glass with an appreciative sigh.

"I've had a long and a hot walk this afternoon, ma'am," he said, half apologetically.

"Yes," Miss Cordelia replied, drooping her head commiseratingly; "I saw you when you passed, Captain Taylor, and I knew your sad errand. It is like your good heart to be so faithful. Poor, dear Eliza!"

"Poor, dear Eliza!" echoed Miss Cordelia.

The captain blinked and looked off at the nodding lilies in the garden. This little tribute of sympathy was very welcome to his lone heart. There was a short pause, during which he groped about mentally for something to say, but his embarrassment could furnish nothing appropriate. He moved awkwardly and brought his great fist down upon his knee, where he had spread his handkerchief. It came in contact with the tiny cake which he had taken from the dish a few minutes before. He picked it up and inspected it half quizzically, as if debating its real use. Then he put it to his lips. The next moment he turned to his hostess.

"What'd you call 'em?" he demanded brusquely.

"Crullers," simpered Miss Cordelia. "They're made from an old last century recipe that belonged to my grand-aunt. I hope you find them good."

"Your aunt was a glory to her sex, ma'am!" Captain Taylor cried. "Find 'em good! I'm a blunt man, and I generally speak my mind, so you must excuse me when I say they're deuced good, and, with your permission, I'll have another."

When he took his leave in the gloaming to return to his solitary home the two sisters stood silently watching his short, stout figure as it rolled along the road. Miss Cordelia was the first to speak.

"You ate three, Cordy," she said as she lifted the empty blue dish tenderly. "I kept count, and I had two. He ate the rest."

"They were very small," Miss Cordelia urged in quick defense of the charge of gluttony thus brought against the vanishing guest.

"They were very good," retorted Miss Cordelia, with a laugh.

The ice thus broken, the captain fell into the pleasant habit of calling very frequently at the small stone house. While Broadmeadows, if it thought of him at all, imagined him spending his evenings in the shadow of bereavement on his own veranda, he was sitting instead in the shadow of the honeysuckle vines on the Slater porch. He was a man of simple affections, a trifle vain and easily flattered, and he was still very lonely. His other neighbors, not comprehending his need of companionship, had left him alone with his sorrow, and it was not likely that this first cordial sympathy should meet with analysis at his hands. He was delighted with the gracious reception accorded him by the two sisters. No auditors had ever listened to his eloquence with just that degree of appreciation which the Slaters so plainly evinced. He thought of them collectively, which was rather a bad sign for their individual interests, and he liked them both in his hearty fashion. He had not yet felt called upon to institute a preference.

Meanwhile the two women were daily drifting farther apart. An unknown element had crept into their quiet existence, and they both chafed at the strife which had sprung up between them. With the key of the larger in her possession Miss Cordelia could afford to laugh at her rival's pretensions, but there were other times when the rival sang softly at the old piano in a voice that was still sweet, and such moments thrilled the stout heart of the commissariat with a dismay that not even the pride in her own ringlets could quell. Of what avail were her ringlets when her antagonist arranged her tresses in similar fashion; and while the fair weather held curls produced by artificial means looked the same to masculine eyes as those provided by nature's hand?

Dutch Cattle in Belgium.

A great many Dutch cattle are imported into Belgium, as a number of farmers find it advantageous to buy certain classes of these Dutch animals rather than to breed them at home. Belgian farmers have given up breeding the Shorthorn race for twenty years past.

Loss of Flesh

When you can't eat breakfast, take Scott's Emulsion. When you can't eat bread and butter, take Scott's Emulsion. When you have been living on a milk diet and want something a little more nourishing, take Scott's Emulsion.

To get fat you must eat fat. Scott's Emulsion is a great fattener, a great strength giver.

Those who have lost flesh want to increase all body tissues, not only fat. Scott's Emulsion increases them all, bone, flesh, blood and nerve.

For invalids, for convalescents, for consumptives, for weak children, for all who need flesh, Scott's Emulsion is a rich and comfortable food, and a natural tonic.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It.

How to Find Out. Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or stringy matter indicates a unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it is evidence of kidney trouble, too frequent desire to pass it or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

What to Do. There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes.

You may have a sample bottle and a book that tells all about it, both sent free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When Home of Swamp-Root, writing mention this paper and don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y.

Anyone whose food does not digest it ought, who has to take thought when and what to eat, should take advantage of this generous offer of Drug Store.

Mi-o-na is almost invariably successful in curing stomach trouble of all kinds from an acute attack of indigestion, chronic case of dyspepsia. By a new rich blood is made, the weakened and health restored. If Mi-o-na were not successful in cases out of 100, an offer like this be ruinous. This offer shows the faith Noyes Drug Store has in the giving powers of Mi-o-na and you begin its use at once. Try it for a anyway. If it fails to help you, it is absolutely nothing, while if what is claimed for it, the expected trifling.

The monument erected by the State of Maine in memory of its soldiers who died during the Civil war at Andersonville, Ga., was unveiled, Monday.

Every citizen in Maine is invited to be present at the dedicatory exercises of Lord Hall, the new laboratory for mechanical and electrical engineering at the University of Maine, Tuesday, Nov. 22, at 2 o'clock p. m.

Sheriff elect B. G. McIntire has decided to appoint W. L. Farrar of South Paris as deputy and jailer at the court house. We feel that the appointment will give general satisfaction and shall be disappointed if Mr. Farrar does not make a good and efficient officer.

Hon. Gustavus A. Robertson, mayor of Augusta, who died at his home Friday night, was a native of Bethel, where he was born 35 years ago, and where his aged father still lives. He had been engaged in the work of teaching until within a few years, having been twenty-five years connected with the Augusta schools. He was serving his second term as mayor of the city, and in September was elected a member of the Maine Senate from Kennebec county.

Editor Carver Makes a Change.

Edgar N. Carver, for the past eighteen years prominently identified with the newspaper business in Oxford county, has retired from the field, and has accepted a position with a publishing house of Chicago. Mr. Carver will be located somewhere in this section of the country, and will be an eastern representative for his house.

Mr. Carver established the Canton Telephone at Canton eighteen years ago, but on the booming of Rumford Falls he moved the paper there and changed the name to the Rumford Falls Times, and of which he was editor and manager, owning a controlling interest in the paper until the advent of Israel A. Herick as editor upon the issuing of preferred stock. After Mr. Herick had retired Mr. Carver again assumed the management of the paper temporarily, leaving again upon the election of D. Murray Travis as editor.

Mr. Carver has been prominent in town affairs. He has served the Board of Trade as its secretary most efficiently. He has been deeply interested in matters of school and religious trend and has been a deacon of the Baptist church for years, and has been a prominent member of important committees on matters vitally connected with the up-building of the Baptist society.

It is Mr. Carver's plan to leave Rumford Falls at once, and later his family will follow him to the new place, which is definitely located. Both Mrs. Carver and Alice have been very popular members of the social life of the town.

University of Maine.

There are about thirty-five Oxford county boys taking regular four years' courses at the University Maine this fall. The different towns are represented as follows:

Norway—L. D. Keene, Porter L. Swift, E. L. Brown.
South Paris—A. G. Bennett, Elmer W. Cummings, Roy H. Porter.
Hebron—Henry W. Bearce, Merle Sturtevant.
Oxford—Andrew J. Thomas, Richard Talbot.
West Paris—Samuel B. Locke.
North Waterford—R. G. Knight.
Hiram—Owen O. Dow.

Besides these there are others taking short courses in pharmacy or agriculture. On the board of associate editors for the Prism are A. M. Richardson of Bethel and Henry W. Bearce of Hebron. Why do not more young ladies take advantage of the courses here? They are open to them the same as to the young gentlemen.

KEZAR FALLS.

Rev. Frank C. Potter of Bethel occupied the M. E. pulpit, last Sunday morning and delighted his many friends with a sermon of intrinsic merit.

Married in Kezar Falls on the evening of November 9th, Bert Morse of Kansas and Mrs. Ethel Busby of Kezar Falls. Mr. and Mrs. Morse started for their home in Phillipsburg, Kansas, on the following day.

Mrs. Lorinda Colomy died in Portland, Nov. 7th, and was brought to her home here and services held, conducted by Rev. Alonzo Stevens of Westbrook, Nov. 9th. Excellent singing was rendered by Rev. H. Pearce, Mrs. W. A. Garber, Mrs. James Chapman and W. T. Norton. The bearers were George M. Mason, A. P. Lincoln, I. M. Stanley and Charles Riddon. Mrs. Colomy leaves two daughters, several sisters and brothers and many friends to mourn their loss.

Mrs. Mary Andrews has returned from her visit to her sons in Norway.

Trouble Along the Line.

To the stockholders of the Curtis Hill and Paris Telephone Co.:—

Now that the time is near when we have our annual meeting, I wish to say a few words to the stockholders.

Our company was incorporated to cover the ground from Norway village to Bethel Hill by the way of South Paris, West Paris, Bryant's Pond and Locke's Mills; also from West Paris to Greenwood City and from West Paris to Sumner by the way of North Paris, and the capital stock was ten thousand dollars.

Our by-laws said and still say the capital stock shall be one thousand dollars.

Why was the capital stock changed from one thousand to five and from five to ten thousand without giving legal notice in the case for the meeting? Why were not all of the stockholders notified of the incorporation meeting, and why were we incorporated to cover this vast territory when there were telephone lines north of West Paris? Our line at the present time contains about forty miles of wire and cost about twenty-five dollars a mile.

This makes one thousand dollars. We have good terminals excepting Norway village. A distance of about two miles would have to be built to connect with local lines there.

It would be well for the stockholders to elect a committee of stockholders to support overboard and get down to a common-sense basis and pay the balance of the debt.

You should not elect men to represent you who have tried to balk every move that has been made during the year past that would benefit the stockholders.

You should not vote for candidates until you know they represent your views as to the management of the line.

We want no combinations with other lines. As we are essentially a farm line you should elect a farmer as president.

As our line was built for mutual benefit, we should not be wasteful, but our just share for its maintenance, and each one serve his year in the management. My year of service as director ends with the annual meeting. I am not a candidate for re-election.

H. E. CUMMINGS.
West Paris, Nov. 13th.

Hanging to a Tree.

The body of a man supposed to be Angus Hoffman, an employee of a Bridgton woolen mill, was hanging by a rope from a tree in Dead Man's Gulch, so called, two miles east of Lee's Junction, Sunday. Hoffman was known to have left Bridgton a week ago and it was supposed he committed suicide four or five days ago. It was reported he carried a sum of money with him and was found in the dead man's clothing. He was about 40 years old. In his pockets was found a bill dated November 4, 1904, for three weeks board. It was made out to Augustus Hoffman from Sanborn & Rowe, boarding-house keepers at Bridgton.

The place where the body was found, Dead Man's Gulch, derived its name from the fact that two other deaths have taken place there. An old tramp died at the gulch several years ago, and two or three seasons ago a man was struck by a train and killed.

It is a wild and lonely spot. An old wood road runs nearby but there is very little travel in that section. There are stories that Dead Man's Gulch is haunted.

PAIN AND INFLAMMATION.

A Simple Remedy for the Successful Treatment of Inflammation and the Banishment of Pain.

Pains and aches are, as a rule, the result of inflammation. And it is always advisable to have some simple and safe remedy in the house, for disease comes like a thief in the night and is apt to strike confusion into a household.

Croup chooses the hours of darkness for its deadly visitation. Cholera morbus, cholera infantum, cramp and colic come frequently at night. Hence every household should be prepared for these midnight emergencies.

Johnson's Anodyne Liniment is the remedy that takes away every pain caused by inflammation. It is the sovereign remedy for colic, cramp, diarrhoea, cholera morbus, bites, bruises, burns, stings, chafing, coughs, colds, croup, catarrh, bronchitis, a croup, lameness, muscle soreness, and pain and inflammation in any part of the body. It can be relied upon to give relief quicker than any other medicine, whether used internally or externally.

In using Johnson's Anodyne Liniment no risk is run. It is absolutely safe and simple. It has an unequalled record of nearly a century of cures, and its reputation is world-wide. It is sold by all druggists, 25 cents and 50 cents a bottle.

A valuable book, "Treatment for Diseases and Care of the Sick-Room," will be sent free of charge upon request to I. S. Johnson & Co., Boston, Mass.

BETHEL.

Charles Mason.
Charles Mason, aged 77 years, son of Ayres Mason, passed away Wednesday morning at 5 o'clock, after a lingering sickness of one year. The funeral will be at the Universalist church, of which Mr. Mason was a member, Friday afternoon at 1 o'clock. He was an interested member and a constant attendant at both the Old Fellows and Masonic lodges, the latter of which will take charge of the ceremonies at burial. Mr. Mason has for several years been first assessor of Bethel Hill corporation and a much respected citizen of Bethel, where he has always resided. He ran a store for many years, and was burned out some thirty years ago, since which time he has been mostly retired from active business, except some deal in timber lands. He married, Oct. 13, 1853, Melissa M., the daughter of Ezra T. Russell. Children now living are, Addie L., now wife of Levi Greenleaf, a lawyer residing in Portland; Fannie M., who has always resided at home; Charles A., a graduate of Orono, a civil engineer, and Harry E., who is permanently connected in the office of the Walter Barker Extract Co., Portland, Me. The youngest daughter, Grace G., married Tom E. Headings of this place. The deceased was the last survivor of three brothers, the other two being Wm. W. and Oliver H., who for many years were among the most active and prominent business men of Bethel. One sister, the wife of Seth Walker of Bethel survives him, and one, the wife of the late Clark S. Edwards, died March 6, 1888.

First Free High School

In the World.
Elbridge Scott Poor was born in Andover, December 28, 1844. Died at Chaplin, Kansas, Nov. 4. He came of old Revolutionary stock and was the oldest son of Elbridge and Susan Bragg Stevens Poor, descendants of one of the oldest families in Maine. He leaves a widow, four sons and one daughter.

His early life and training was in Maine, in a typical Puritan home. Leaving this home after the common school education, he entered the business college in Springfield, Mass., from which he graduated with honors, going from there to Bellaire, Ohio, where he held a clerkship in the Benwood Nail Works.

After spending about four years in the capacity of a clerk, he returned East and in 1869 married Frances C. Jordan at Concord, N. H. Returning to Ohio for one year he caught the western fever and in the fall of 1870 he went to Kansas and for a few months was telegrapher at Wamingo, when he received the appointment of agent and telegraph operator at Chapman, Kansas, then a new station just opened, on the wide prairie without another building than the depot in which they lived.

He was first postmaster in the town, which office he held for several years. Opportunity coming he entered the mercantile business, buying a small building and moved the east side of the town, where he lived to the present time. Later he was leader in forming a Congregational society, establishing a church of which he was deacon. He was connected with the Sabbath school as superintendent and teacher for many years. He also held the office of clerk of the church from its organization until his death, 21 years.

It was through his efforts that the west side of the public schoolhouse was built in 1870, which was then considered a large, but soon proved to be too small, and the east side was added. He was a member of the school board for many years and took a very active interest in its work, and his interest in school work led him to be an earnest worker for larger things, so when the first call for a high school was given he was one of the most prominent advocates and rejoiced in the results, which gave to Dickinson county the first free high school in the world.

Science has measured many things but naught can measure the influence of a good, pure peace-loving citizen. Always quick to see the need and then to carry out the deed to its completion. Such was Mr. Poor, ever, with willing hands and cheery words and smile to help his fellow men.

The present cemetery on Indian Hill, was his gift to the town in 1879. The first need for such a place was when a stranger traveling through, died.

WEST FRYEBURG.

Entertained Its Organizer.
A very pleasant meeting of the Stirling Literary Club was held, Nov. 1st, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. D. E. Hutchins. There was a good number in attendance at the afternoon session, which was augmented by the arrival of the club members, the evening, and all were ready to do justice to the appetizing spread prepared by the always popular hosts. Readings from Emerson by members of the club foamed the program of the afternoon.

Mrs. E. H. Osgood of Portland was a guest for a part of the last week of Mrs. J. A. Jones, and at her home on Friday afternoon by invitation of Mrs. Jones the Stirling Literary Club met and were given a parliamentary drill by Mrs. Osgood, who organized the club thirteen years ago, and has retained a special regard for the club of which she is a truly honored honorary member.

While the club membership has changed greatly, those now comprising the club are well known to Mrs. Osgood, for whom they cherish an affectionate interest, as well for her own sake as for that of her mother, the late Mrs. Loretta Haley of this section who was an interested and active member until her death.

WEST LOVELL.

Boys Kill a Bear.
Monday forenoon, Nov. 14th, Ralph McAllister, thirteen years old, went hunting for the first time. He accompanied his two cousins, Oris LeBaron and Geo. Fox. When about a mile from home they separated and soon Ralph saw a bear coming toward him. He had his father's rifle and fired, wounding the bear but not killing him, when the bear took for him. Oris hearing the shot turned and fired, when the bear wheeled, going toward George, who fired the fatal shot. Ralph feels that the glory of hitting a bear with the first shot he ever fired from a rifle is almost as great as the killing one. Limes Bowley shot a deer the same forenoon.

SHOES MADE TO ORDER

And reasons why you should have your Shoes made that way. Because they are made to fit your feet and you do not have to fit your feet to them. Because they wear to look well and hold their shape. Because they are made from the best stock that can be bought, and nothing but solid leather soles used. Because they cost no more than any shoes with the same kind of stock in them. Because we take the measures and guarantee a fit and you run no chances. Remember we carry a nice line of men's shoes in stock all our own make.

BUCKFIELD.

A. T. Cole, who has been ill, is improving.

Ardon F. Tilton, wife and son Don spent the Sabbath with friends in Buckfield.

Notwithstanding the roads were sloppy the club women were out in force Tuesday.

The P. & R. F. R.'s agent, R. C. Bradford, and wife have recently visited friends in town.

Howard P. Shaw, a Tech student, is reported to have got the regulation belt in the back from a policeman's club.

Friday evening, Nov. 18, the Buckfield Literary club will tender a reception to the Neaglescot History club at Neaglescot hall.

Telephone stock has received a setback on account of the late storm. The lines are in bad condition all along. Posts are broken, crossbars twisted, etc.

At a meeting of Buckfield Grange, Saturday, Nov. 12, candidates were proposed and others initiated. A special meeting was set to facilitate work.

Chas. P. Hatch, former bank examiner, now engaged with the New England Pulp Co. of New York, with a brother and R. H. Morrill are up the line seeking big game.

Take Notice

You remember our Thanksgiving Exhibit last year. "The best ever made in Oxford Co." With your assistance, we shall exceed last year's.

We have secured the best native poultry that could be had, and will fill all orders in or out of our line, if placed in season. We solicit your orders for Celery, Oysters, Lobsters, etc.
